For those who prefer their four walls solid rather than canvas, Sonora Resort off the east coast of Vancouver Island among the Discovery Islands is the answer. This luxury fishing lodge, ringed by snow-capped peaks, is an hour by boat from Campbell River. If you want to catch a salmon, this is the place to do it; and once you have hooked your prime sockeye or chinook, the resort will arrange for it to be canned or smoked for you. At the right time of year, this is also the ideal place to spot migrating orca whales with their distinctive triangular fins and, from August to October, the famed grizzly bears, best seen from observation towers on land belonging to the Homalco tribe of the coastal Salish people, who act as local guides.
